【Senju】 Protector of the Rat

It has a thousand arms, holding its own special representative attribute. It is believed to embrace and alleviate the suffering of the world.

【Kokuzo】 Protector of the Ox and Tiger

It symbolizes the vast and boundless Buddha wisdom and mercy that permeate the universe.

【Monju】 Protector of the Rabbit

Monju symbolizes wisdom and the enlightened mind. It is often depicted as sitting on a lion. This represents the use of wisdom to tame the mind.

【Fugen】 Protector of the Dragon and Snake

It is often depicted holding a lotus flower and riding an elephant, symbolising the great power of Buddhist practice in overcoming all obstacles.

【Seishi】 Protector of the Horse

It illuminates all creation with the light of wisdom, and gives supreme strength to all creatures.

【Dainichi】 Protector of the Sheep and Monkey

Its name means 'Spreader of Light in All Directions'. In Japan, Dainichi is at the centre of the universe, considered to be the root of all phenomena.

【Fudo】 Protector of the Rooster

It appears ferocious and menacing, with threatening postures and faces designed to subdue evil and frighten unbelievers into accepting Buddhist law.

【Amida】 Protector of the Dog and Boar (pig)

It is one of the loftiest saviour figures in Japanese Buddhism. It can bestow the virtues of infinite compassion and eternal existence, and wishes to help all human being.

【Kannon】

As one of Japan's most beloved deities, it is often called God or Goddess of Mercy and Compassion. It is said to appear in thirty three forms to save people.

【Sitting Buddha】

It is the image of Buddha after achieving enlightenment and typically portrayed wearing simple clothing, without accessories, jewellery, or weapons.

【Sitting Yakushi】

As the 'Medicine Buddha,' it is described as a doctor who cures suffering using the medicine of its teachings.

About Size of Buddhas,

The height of each statue means from top of its halo to the bottom of its base.
